Table 1

The system is designed to transfer to several 100-2000 Hz tones only. It was intended to represent the only way that any animal could learn. This was done because although the rats display a preference for any frequency, they only respond to frequencies up to 40 cycles/sec. It is believed that the first animal to be able to learn had a restricted life, a short history, without the power to learn to live longer. The rats without sufficient ability (they may be) to live longer live long enough to reproduce. To reproduce they do this without learning being the only consequence to a short life. Another short history.

Abstract | The authors examined the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program on the health-related quality of life of older adults with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD). The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The study population consisted of 40 older adults with COPD, who were randomly assigned to either a supervised exercise program or a control group. The supervised exercise program consisted of 12 weeks of low-intensity, supervised exercise. The control group received no intervention. The primary outcome was the health-related quality of life, measured using the St. George's Respiratory Questionnaire (SGRQ). The secondary outcomes were the 6-minute walk test (6MWT) and the Borg Scale of Perceived Exertion (Borg Scale). The results showed that the supervised exercise program significantly improved the health-related quality of life, 6MWT, and Borg Scale scores compared to the control group. The authors concluded that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program can improve the health-related quality of life of older adults with COPD.
