Mummies

Long ago, the Ancient Egyptians invented a way of preserving dead bodies that enables them to remain lifelike.

This included two stages: first embalming and then wrapping and burying the body in a tomb. The process is called mummification.

Embalming

First the body is taken to a special place for purification. There the embalmers wash the body with palm wine and rinse it with water from the River Nile. Then one of the embalmers makes a cut on the left side of the body and removes most of the internal organs. These are packed in natron which makes them dry out. The body is then covered and stuffed with natron to dry it out.

After around 40 days, the body is washed once more with water from the Nile. Then it is covered with oils to help the skin stay flexible. The internal organs are wrapped in linen and put back inside the body. The body is then stuffed with dry materials so that it looks lifelike. Finally, it is rubbed in scented oils and is ready to be wrapped.

Wrapping the mummy

The body is wrapped in fine linen. A papyrus scroll with spells from the Book of the Dead is placed between the wrapped hands. More linen strips are placed around the body and resin is painted on them to help them stick together. The embalmers place small amulets between the layers of linen to protect the mummy on its journey to the underworld. A cloth, painted with a picture of the god Osiris, is then wrapped around the whole body. Finally, a large cloth is used to enclose the whole mummy and tied with strips of cloth.

Before the body is put into the coffin, a board is placed on top of it. It is then lowered into a first coffin. This is then put inside a second coffin.

Finally, the body and its coffins are placed inside a large stone sarcophagus in the tomb.

Now the body is ready for its journey through the underworld. If he is judged to be good, he will be sent to live for all eternity in the beautiful 'Field of Reeds'.

Glossary

amulet	small charms to ward off evil spells
embalming	treating a dead body in order to preserve it
natron	a natural salt
papyrus	paper made from reeds
sarcophagus	a large stone coffin, usually carved and decorated underworld	the Egyptians believed that, when they died, they went to the underworld where they would be judged. If they were judged to be pure and good, they would go to a place that was like Egypt, and live there forever.
