The Education of Nations Stephen Kosack,2012-08-16 What causes a government to invest or not invest in poor citizens especially mass education In The Education of Nations Stephen Kosack focuses on three radically different developing countries whose developmental trajectories bear little resemblance to each other Brazil Ghana and Taiwan and offers an elegant and pragmatic answer to this crucially important question Quite simply the level of investment in mass education is the product of one of two simple conditions one political and one economic The first condition is the nature and success of political entrepreneurs at organizing the poor politically the second is the flexibility of the labor market faced by employers who need skilled workers Drawing from a half century of evidence he has found that irrespective of every other factor these two conditions alone explain whether education is available to the poor or restricted to elites as well as many of the key features of education systems An empirically rich and theoretically novel study The Education of Nations will change how we think about the developing world s approach to education and development 15 Practice Sets for SSC

Ethical Trade, Gender and Sustainable Livelihoods Kiah Smith, 2014-03-21 Fair and ethical trade is often criticized for being highly gendered and for institutionalizing the ethical values of consumers the priorities of NGOs and governments and most of all food retailers But little is known about how women smallholder farmers experience diverse ethical standards or whether and how standards reflect their values local cultural and environmental contexts or priorities for achieving sustainable livelihoods Linking gender smallholder livelihoods and global ethical trade regulations this book reveals that multiple understandings of social justice environmental sustainability and well being or ethicality exist in parallel to those institutionalized in ethical trade schemes Through an in depth case study of smallholder subsistence and French bean farming in Kenya the book grounds the analysis of livelihoods gender and ethical trade in women smallholders perspectives links the macro level of markets with the micro level of livelihoods and engenders relations of power structure and agency in food networks It brings together disparate bodies of theory to illustrate the knowledge strategies and values of women smallholder farmers that are often beyond the scope of ethical trade regulations It also provides a challenging new vision for doing food systems research

Working with Assumptions in International Development Program Evaluation Apollo M. Nkwake, 2012-08-30 A major reason complex programs are so difficult to evaluate is that the assumptions that inspire them are poorly articulated Stakeholders of such programs are often unclear about how the change process will unfold Thus it is so difficult to reasonably anticipate the early and midterm changes that need to happen in order for a longer term goal to be reached The lack of clarity about the mini steps that must be taken to reach a long term outcome not only makes the task of evaluating a complex initiative challenging but reduces the likelihood that all of the important factors related to the long term goal will be addressed Most of the resources that have attempted to address this dilemma have been popularized as theory of change or sometimes program theory approaches Although these approaches emphasize and elaborate the sequence of changes mini steps that lead to the long term goal of interest and the connections between program activities and outcomes that occur at each step of the way they do not do enough to clarify how program managers or evaluators should deal with assumptions Assumptions the glue that holds all the pieces together remain abstract and far from applicable In this book the author tackles this important assumptions theme head on covering a breadth of ground from the epistemology of development assumptions to the art of making logical assumptions as well as recognizing explicit and testing assumptions within an elaborate program theory from program design implementation monitoring and evaluation
