

1. Why does the Kaiser say he "just has no confidence" in the president's handling?

His statement brings his go-to phrase into play: "confidence is everything". And since his confidence in the president depends upon, among, other things, the president's ability to communicate, and especially his capacity to tell them to go home, president's confidence is what makes sense. And so he said his confidence in the president is not based on a solid basis of evidence, which means that confidence is not necessarily a good indicator of the president's ability to lead. And so he said his confidence is not
