Heat is the _____ of _____ from a one object to another due to a difference in _____. Heat can be _____ in _____, BTUs (British thermal unit), or calories.

Heat and _____ are closely related, but they are not the same thing. The temperature of an object is determined by how fast its molecules are moving. The faster the molecules are _____, the higher the temperature. We say objects that have a high temperature are _____ and objects with a _____ temperature are cold.

Transferring of Heat

When two items are _____ or touching each other, their _____ will _____ energy called heat. They will try to come to a point where they both have the same temperature. This is called _____. _____ will flow from the hotter object to the colder. The molecules in the hotter object will _____ down and the _____ in the colder object will speed up. Eventually they will get to the point where they have the _____ temperature.

This happens all the time around you. For example, when you take an ice cube and put it into a warm soda. The ice cube will become warmer and _____, while the soda will cool down.

Hot Objects Expand

When something gets hotter it will _____ or get bigger. At the same time, when something gets _____ it will _____. This _____ is used to make _____ thermometers. The line in the thermometer is actually _____. As the liquid gets _____, it will expand and rise in the thermometer to show a higher temperature. It's the _____ and contraction due to temperature that allows the _____ to work.
