

Write-Pair-Share Step-By-Step

WPS is an engagement routine that will get all of your students involved. Here is the procedure:

1. Assign students numbers: 1's and 2's.
2. Write – Give students time to write their answers in complete sentences. As they are writing, walk around the class and quietly tell specific students what you like about their answers. Tell some of those students that you have nominated them to share their answer to the class later. Tell them that they can read their answer directly off of their worksheets.
  - a. If a nominated student has mechanical errors in his answer, help to correct them so that he does not read the errors to the whole class later on.
3. When students begin to finish, tell them to read their answer back to themselves and to make sure that they do not have any mistakes. This helps to keep quick finishers occupied.
4. Pair – Have 1's and 2's face each other respectfully and begin their pair share:
  - a. Tell them who is going to read the question first and who will answer first. They will switch after.
    - i. "Once you're going to read the question and twos you're going to answer. When you are finished, then please switch."
  - b. Point out that, "What did you get?" is not an appropriate way to pair share. Point out that reading the question is important for learning how to communicate with fluency.
5. Share – When most students are finished, ask the question to the class and use your nominees from step 2 to jump start the discussion.
  - a. Start this step before the last few pairs finish, to avoid any classroom management issues caused from dead time and to avoid awkwardness for the last few pairs.
  - b. Tell students to use a loud "classroom voice" so that everybody can hear.
  - c. Point out that students should read directly off of their papers.
  - d. Point out that if a student has a similar idea to something that has been shared, they should acknowledge the person who shared the idea instead of saying, "He took my answer!" or "I was going to say that!" Write this sentence starter on the board:
    - i. "My idea is similar to _____'s idea in that..."This helps to decrease the anxiety of students who have their answers "taken" by a peer. It also encourages paying attention and validating one another.
  - e. Give immediate and specific praise for student responses. At the least, point out how you liked how the participant answered in a complete sentence instead of giving a typical one-word student response (if they read off their papers, they will answer with complete sentences). Things to specifically praise:
    - i. Inaughtful answers
    - ii. If a student acknowledges a peer
    - iii. Use of a good academic word or a vocabulary word
    - iv. A student who speaks loudly and fluently

Advantages of a pair share:

- Students who normally do not participate in class discussions will be empowered because they will have 100% certainty that they have a right answer when nominated to share. The student will also be able to read directly off of the worksheet to avoid the embarrassment of blanking out. Also, the student would have already practiced reading the correct answer with a partner.
- Students will answer in fluent complete sentences. They will learn how to restate questions instead of giving one-word answers.
- The teacher has an opportunity to give public praise to students who normally do not receive it. During the paired portion, students are set up to succeed during the class discussion.
- Every student has a task that requires engagement. They cannot be passive observers.
- When other students hear you specifically praise one of their peers, they will consider how they can model the skill in their own answers.
