

MENTAL HEALTH NURSING PROCESS RECORDING GUIDE

The interaction between the nurse and the patient, as you recall, is recorded and examined in the process recording—that is, a record of the on-going interaction, the process of two people relating with each other. The recording includes a description of the patient's nonverbal and verbal behaviors, the nurse's response, identification of the therapeutic technique used by the nurse, and an explanation of the nurse's evaluation and interpretation of the interaction.

The major elements of the process recording are reviewed here:

Patient's Nonverbal Behavior:

First, notice the patient's nonverbal behavior, because it often speaks so much more loudly than the patient's actual words. Look at the patient's appearance—is clothing appropriate to the weather, the activity, the place? Are jewelry and make-up likewise appropriate? Is the patient neat, clean, free of odors, etc.?

Next, look at the patient's body language—is he smiling, laughing, crying, maintaining a tense facial expression? Is his posture erect, stooped, slouched? Does he walk rapidly, shuffling, not move at all? Are his body movements slow, fast, jerky? What are his motor activities (kicking his foot against a chair, falling asleep during a conversation, etc.)? Is the patient able to establish eye contact with you? Does talking about certain topics cause the eye contact to increase or decrease? Are there signs of anxiety (moist palms, restlessness)?

Based on these observations, you may assess the patient's affect (or feeling tone—a reflection of mood). Is he happy, sad, lonely, apathetic, cheerful, angry, etc.? Is his feeling tone appropriate to the situation and recent events?

You may make many more observations of nonverbal behavior and include them in your process recording. The behaviors mentioned here are only to serve as a guide, a brief outline to help you gather ideas together.

Patient's Verbal Behavior:

Now, consider the patient's actual conversation with you. While you are talking with the patient, think about the following points and include them in your assessment:

1. Notice the patient's tone of voice—is it soft, harsh, commanding, frightened?
