Columbia Crew Survival Investigation Report National Aeronautics and Space Administration, 2012-11-08 Human space flight is still in its infancy spacecraft navigate narrow tracks of carefully computed ascent and entry trajectories with little allowable deviation Until recently it remained the province of a few governments As private industry and more countries join in this great enterprise we must share findings that may help protect those who venture into space In the history of NASA this approach has resulted in many improvements in crew survival After the Apollo 1 fire sweeping changes were made to spacecraft design and to the way crew rescue equipment was positioned and available at the launch pad After the Challenger accident a jettisonable hatch personal oxygen systems parachutes rafts and pressure suits were added to ascent and entry operations of the space shuttle As we move toward a time when human space flight will be commonplace there is an obligation to make this inherently risky endeavor as safe as feasible Design features equipment training and procedures all play a role in improving crew safety and survival in contingencies In aviation continual improvement in oxygen systems pressure suits parachutes ejection seats and other equipment and systems has been made It is a core value in the aviation world to evaluate these systems in every accident and pool the data to understand how design improvements may improve the chances that a crew will survive in a future accident The Columbia accident was not survivable After the Columbia Accident Investigation Board CAIB investigation regarding the cause of the accident was completed further consideration produced the question of whether there were lessons to be learned about how to improve crew survival in the future This investigation was performed with the belief that a comprehensive respectful investigation could provide knowledge that can protect future crews in the worldwide community of human space flight Additionally in the course of the investigation several areas of research were identified that could improve our understanding of both nominal space flight and future spacecraft accidents This report is the first comprehensive publicly available accident investigation report addressing crew survival for a human spacecraft mishap and it provides key information for future crew survival investigations The results of this investigation are intended to add meaning to the sacrifice of the crew's lives by making space flight safer for all future generations Many findings conclusions and recommendations have resulted from this investigation that will be valuable both to spacecraft designers and accident investigators This report provides the reader an expert level of knowledge regarding the sequence of events that contributed to the loss of Columbia s crew on February 1 2003 and what can be learned to improve the safety of human space flight for all future crews It is the team s expectation that readers will approach the report with the respect and integrity that the subject and the crew of Columbia deserve
