Endocrine System and the Nervous System

Background

The endocrine system has specialized glands, hormones and receptors. Together, they coordinate and control body functions through chemical messengers and body interactions as reproductive, respiratory, circulatory and digestive.

Basically, all endocrine glands release hormones, these are then sent through the bloodstream to coordinate the processes within the body.

1. The hypothalamus, which is the control point in the brain, releases all chemical signals passing through the nervous system to the rest of the body.
2. The endocrine system, which is a network of glands that release hormones into the bloodstream, which is transported from the hypothalamus where signals are sent to the rest of the body.

The endocrine system works in tandem with the nervous system to control all body functions and processes.

Four glands, known as the master glands, control the system: the hypothalamus, pituitary, thyroid and the adrenal glands.

PART 1: The Glands and their Associated Hormones

Task: Identify the glands and their associated hormones.
