Handbook of Classical Conditioning David G. Lavond, Joseph E. Steinmetz, 2012-12-06 When conducting scientific research in any field it is not sufficient to simply design thoughtful and informative experiments to explore ideas and hypotheses The experiments must be conducted in such a manner that the data generated effectively address the ideas and hypotheses under study Collecting good data necessitates the use of good methods techniques and instrumentation Behavioral neuroscience is most certainly a field that over the years has required novel inventive and effective methods and tech niques to collect data on a rather difficult subject namely how the brain and nervous system encode behavior Perhaps one of the most interesting things about the field of behavioral neuroscience is that most scientists in this field are engaged in a variety of activities it is not always the same boring routine The rule not the exception in this field is that investigators are trained in a variety of techniques and skills This work requires knowledge of skills in such diverse techniques as surgery animal training basic electronics computer programming statistics and histology as well as having a good theoretical background knowledge of the relevant literature and the creativity and logic necessary to design and execute critical experiments One does not have to be an expert in all of these skills and conversely not all skills require an expert

Handbook of Biomedical Image Analysis David Wilson, Swamy Laxminarayan, 2007-04-25 Our goal is to develop automated methods for the segmentation of three dimensional biomedical images Here we describe the segmentation of confocal microscopy images of bee brains 20 individuals by registration to one or several atlas images Registration is performed by a highly parallel implementation of an entropy based nonrigid registration algorithm using B-spline transformations We present and evaluate different methods to solve the correspondence problem in atlas based registration An image can be segmented by registering it to an individual atlas an average atlas or multiple atlases When registering to multiple atlases combining the individual segmentations into a single segmentation can be achieved by atlas selection or multi-class iterative decision fusion We describe all these methods and evaluate these segmentation accuracies that they achieve by performing experiments with electronic phantoms as well as by comparing their outputs to a manual gold standard The present work is focused on the mathematical and computational theory behind a technique for deformable image registration termed Hyperelastic Warping and demonstration of the technique via applications in image registration and strain measurement The approach combines well established principles of nonlinear continuum mechanics with forces derived directly from three dimensional image data to achieve registration The general approach does not require the definition of landmarks, ducts or surfaces although it can accommodate these if available Representative problems demonstrate the robust and flexible nature of the approach Three dimensional registration methods are introduced for registering MRI volumes of the pelvis and prostate The chapter first reviews the applications xi xii Preface challenges and previous methods of image registration in the prostate The
