

Verify that the cable connections are secure. If the cable connections are secure, press the Report Page button on the front of the printer to print an HP® Report page.

Then follow the following options to connect the printer to the computer:

- 1. Disable any software firewall running on the computer.
 A software firewall can prevent the computer from finding the printer during setup. Using the printer software installation CD, if the computer cannot detect the printer, the printer software cannot be installed on the computer. If the computer has a software firewall, turn the firewall on and select when it is enabled (such as, Windows® Firewall Control Center, or Windows® Firewall and the Windows Firewall Control Center) and turn off the option for finding the firewall.

Note: The printer cannot connect with Windows XP if you are sharing with the computer to the printer. If the computer is only running the Windows XP software driver, you should need to disable the firewall during software installation. Change the printer's status IP address.

Before installing the printer software on a computer, temporarily disable the software firewall on the computer, and then change the printer's status IP address when the printer software is installed on the computer, to enable the driver. The instructions appear under the printer's software website (search computer's IP address by a software firewall) go to Configure the printer for a software firewall page.

- 2. Verify that the computer is connected to the network.
 Verify that the computer is connected to the network, and the computer LAN is enabled and working correctly.
- 3. Check the printer and the computer whether they are added to a network, a local network that is part of a larger network. If the computer is not in a different network from the printer, the software installation can be performed. Compare the printer IP address listed on the HP Report page with the IP address for the computer. If the IP address listed on the HP Report page and the computer IP address are the same, the printer and the computer are not on the same network. That indicates, if the computer IP address begins with 192 and the printer IP address begins with 192, the printer and the computer are not on the same network.

to change IP address on a Windows computer:

- 1. Click Start, click Run, and then enter Command.
- 2. Type ipconfig at the command prompt, and then press Enter.
