Kolovsky,1999-06-18 With progress in technology the problem of protecting human beings machines and technological processes from sources of vibration and impact has become of utmost importance Traditional classical methods of protection based upon utilising elastic passive and dissipative elements turn out to be inefficient in many situations and can not completely satisfy the complex and often contradictory claims imposed on modern vibration protection systems which must provide high performance at minimum dimensions For these reasons active vibration protection systems which are actually systems of automatic control with independent power sources are widely used nowadays. Appearing and developing active systems require that traditional approaches to the analysis and synthesis of vibration protection systems must be revised. Firstly, there exists the necessity to restate the problem of vibration protection from mechanical actions as an equivalent problem in closed loop control systems design which is to be solved by the methods of control theory. Furthermore, it turns out that certain inherent properties of active systems must be taken into account for a proper design. In the majority of cases, the dynamic models of the objects to be protected and the bases to which these objects are to be attached must be revised. They are no longer considered as rigid bodies but elastic bodies with weak dissipation.
