This volume is an important study for understanding the complex interconnections between basic science and its sources of economic support in the period between the two world wars. The focus of the study is on the Institute for Theoretical Physics later renamed the Niels Bohr Institute at Copenhagen University and the role of its director the eminent Danish physicist Niels Bohr in the funding and administration of the Institute. Under Bohr's direction the Copenhagen Institute was a central workplace in the development and the formulation of quantum mechanics in the 1920s and later became an important center for nuclear research in the 1930s. Dr Aaserud brings together the scholarship on the internal origins and development of nuclear physics in the 1930s with descriptions of the concurrent changes in private support for international basic science particularly as represented by Rockefeller Foundation philanthropy. In the process the book places the emergence of nuclear physics in a larger historical context. This book will appeal to historians of science, physicists and advanced students in these areas.

The editors Angela Brew and Judyth Sachs have captured the intricacies of teaching and learning in different academic domains in this rich and varied collection. The book explores students' responses to contemporary art to multicultural music and to architecture for the poor and dispossessed. It explores students' ability to transfer mathematical knowledge from one subject to another, how students learn to talk like a pharmacist or understand basic concepts in physics, how students are prepared for university study in first year classes or in the operating theatre, how they learn to write like a scientist, how they learn in online discussions and how they understand group work and group assessment. Each chapter is grounded in rigorous research and scholarship and indicates actions that have been taken to improve teaching and students' learning. This book is a
