Background

Low back pain (LBP) is a common problem affecting a large proportion of the population. It is a leading cause of disability and is associated with significant economic burden. The prevalence of LBP is increasing worldwide, and it is estimated that by 2020, it will be the second most common cause of disability-adjusted life years (DALYs) globally.

The pathogenesis of LBP is complex and multifactorial, involving a combination of genetic, environmental, and lifestyle factors. The lumbar spine is particularly vulnerable to LBP due to its unique biomechanical characteristics and the high loads it bears during daily activities.

Understanding the underlying mechanisms of LBP is crucial for developing effective prevention and treatment strategies. This study aims to investigate the relationship between lumbar spine biomechanics and LBP, with a focus on the role of the intervertebral discs and the surrounding musculature.
