Microbial Reproduction: Microbial Growth

Objectives: Following this activity students will be able to: (1) describe the process of microbial growth and (2) explain the factors that affect microbial growth.

Background: Microbial reproduction is the process by which a microorganism produces more of its kind. Microorganisms can reproduce asexually or sexually.

Microbial Growth Curves: The graph showing the change in the number of microorganisms over time is called a growth curve.

A growth curve is a plot showing the relationship between time and the number of microorganisms. It is used to study the growth of microorganisms under different conditions.

1. Why do you need to know the growth curve of a microorganism? (What information does it give you about growth?)

It tells you how fast the microorganism is growing and how long it takes to reach a certain number of cells.

2. How do you think different growth curves represent different microorganisms?

Some have a long lag phase and some have a short lag phase. Some have a high growth rate and some have a low growth rate.

Microbial Growth:

Microbial growth is the increase in the number of microorganisms in a population. It is a process that occurs in all living organisms.

In this Microbial Growth activity, you will learn how to measure the growth of microorganisms. You will also learn how to interpret the growth curve and how to use it to study the growth of microorganisms.

3. How does the appearance of the growth curve change as you grow the microorganism?

It starts with a lag phase, then a log phase, then a stationary phase, and finally a death phase.

4. How does the growth curve change as you grow the microorganism under different conditions?

It can be affected by temperature, pH, and other factors.
