The researchers' first aim was to identify whether the intervention was acceptable to young people in Egypt. In November 2011, they conducted focus group discussions with 10 adolescents (aged 15–19) who were attending the intervention programme. The participants were asked to discuss their views on the programme, its content, its delivery, and its acceptability. The researchers also asked the adolescents to provide feedback on the programme, such as what they liked and what they did not like. The researchers also asked the adolescents to provide feedback on the programme, such as what they liked and what they did not like. The researchers also asked the adolescents to provide feedback on the programme, such as what they liked and what they did not like.
