

Moore v. Harper and the Fire Next Time

By Jonathan M. Winer

THE SUPREME COURT'S 6-3 DECISION IN Moore v. Harper may well be one of the most consequential Constitutional cases affecting the future of American democracy. But its political meaning is as significant as its legal implications. Its wider context is the current court's crisis of legitimacy, Donald Trump's attempted coup to overthrow the result of the 2020 election and the determination of Justice Clarence Thomas to sustain the right-wing's legal options to nullify a federal election in the future.

The ruling rejected the so-called "Independent State Legislature Theory," (see Constitutional Coup in the October 2021 Washington Spectator) which contends that the Constitution renders decisions of state legislatures unreviewable by state courts, and that they are therefore outside the boundaries and requirements of the state constitutions when it comes to gerrymandering and redistricting in one clause, and the selection of Presidential electors in another.

The majority opinion, written by Chief Justice John Roberts, should be understood as his desperate effort to undertake a rescue of the Court's legitimacy, and maybe the country in the process. Roberts recruited the court's newest Republican members, Brett Kavanaugh and Amy Coney Barrett, to save their tattered robes, too, and join him in making it harder for anyone to disrupt a future Presidential contest with competing versions of who in fact won the election.

The Independent State Legislature Theory relies for its authority on supposed textualism claiming both the literal meaning of short phrases plucked from the Constitution, as well as outrageously bogus history. Its advocates have unashamedly claimed the authority of a downright fraudulent document from 1818, the "Pinckney Plan," conceived by Charles Pinckney, a South Carolina signer of the Constitution. This argument stated the framers' original intent in the Elections Clause was that elections would be decided only in state legislatures, rather than through the entire apparatus of checks and balances in each state. The only problem with this bit of originalist history is that the "Pinckney Plan" was a forgery.

As further support for the petitioners' absolutist interpretation of the Elections Clause, they also cite the Founders' view that state legislatures were held in higher regard than state judiciaries. This originalist history is also bunk, dismantled by historians. (Professor Rosemarie Zagurri, of George Mason University, demolishes the originalist tower of falsehoods in the Boston College Law Review.)

The theory posits that the Constitution says "state legislatures"

alone will decide on the time, place and manner for federal elections, and on how the state chooses electoral votes for President (by congressional district, for example, by state, or even by county). The doctrine gives whoever happens to be in the state legislature at that moment the sole right to make these decisions. Regardless of a Governor's veto. Regardless of state law. Regardless of the state's constitution. Regardless of the decisions of the state courts. Regardless of the voters.

If adopted in its most extreme form, the theory would have allowed state legislatures to decide whenever they wanted to select the winner in a Presidential race by certifying the slate of electors they want in the Electoral College. Its endorsement by the Court would have opened the 2024 Presidential elections to the filing of competing electoral slates in states controlled by Republican legislatures — especially those with Democratic governors, which is Trump's dream scenario.

Endorsement of the theory by the Court would also have retroactively legitimated the efforts by Trump lawyers John Eastman, Sidney Powell, Rudy Giuliani, and a slew of their confederates to delay the certification of Joe Biden as President in order to give the state legislators time to declare that they had
