Further, sending such messages about the software companies' anti-left policy, affecting their business, constitutes a primary act of free press and hence constitutes an exercise of the protected free press right under the state anti-discrimination law as required by section 14(1)(a) of the Canadian Charter. As stated earlier, as a general matter, as a general rule, non-protected free press does not constitute an actual exercise of rights. Thus, the free press right is not exercised when Congress sends messages that deny free press and violate this provision. It does not mean, as the right advocates do, that Congress cannot send such
