

WHAT ROLE DID THE AMERICAN WOMEN PLAY IN THE CIVIL RIGHTS MOVEMENT FROM THE 1950S TO THE 1960S

Many women played imperative roles during the civil rights movement from the 1950s to the 1960s. The movement was male-dominated and sexist so women were often overshadowed by men. To this day, men are commemorated more than women for their efforts during the civil rights movement. Women that played important roles during this movement include Rosa Parks, who is acknowledged for her crucial role in the Montgomery bus boycott. Ella Baker, who is reverently known as the mother of the Civil rights movement. And Diane Nash, joint founder of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC). Women also played an important role when it came to militant resistance in the Black Panther party, such as Joan Tenka Lewis, the first female member of the party. Women who faced sexism in these movements remained resolute.

The civil rights movement fought for social justice during the 1950s and 1960s for African Americans to gain liberty through the law. Slavery had been abolished, but it didn't end discriminatory behaviour towards Black people. Black people continued to go through traumatic racism, especially in the South. By the 1950s, African Americans and many other Americans deployed and began an unmatched battle for equality over two decades. Founded by Huey Newton and Bobby Seale, the Black Panther Party became the most notable black militant resistance organisation during the late 1960s.

On December 1, 1955, Rosa Parks was on a packed Montgomery city bus when the driver, after realising that there were white riders standing in the aisle, asked Parks and other Black passengers to give up their seats and stand. Three of the passengers gave up their seats, but Rosa Parks declined. She was arrested later on and fined $10 (£112.63 today) for the misdemeanour and $4 (£45.05 today) costs of handling the case, she ended up paying neither of them. Alternatively, she accepted Montgomery National Association for the Advancement of Colored People's chapter president, E. D. Nixon's proposal to help her retinal the sentence and therefore protesting legal segregation in Alabama.
