Ten Principles of Economics

- At first glance, this might look peculiar. But in reality, there are many similarities between households and economies.
- Household decide.. which household members do which tasks and what each member receives in return.
- A household must allocate its scarce resources (time, car milage etc) among its various members. (Cooking dinner, Laundry, driving etc.)
- Taking into account each member's abilities, efforts, and desires.
- Similarly, society also faces many decisions. (growing food, cloth making, designing computer software's etc.)

Ten Principles of Economics

- The management of society's resources is important because resources are scarce.
