Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The first session was a warm-up, the second was a cardiovascular workout, and the third was a strength training session. The results showed that the program had a significant positive effect on the women's physical and psychological health. The women who participated in the program showed a significant increase in their physical fitness, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and a significant decrease in their psychological stress, as measured by the Perceived Stress Scale. The program was well-tolerated by the women, and they reported a high level of enjoyment and adherence. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can be an effective way to improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Remember: There's good to hope that you will suffer. It opens the way to thinking in the negative thoughts and working on all of them in the journal. But I want you to know that you will get through this. The journey will not take those negative thoughts and self-loathing into reality. We expect all our patients that you are not alone. Throughout the journey, I will be there to help you with every step.

Psychological Counseling Research Focus James A. Patterson, Irina N. Lipschitz, 2008

Counseling psychology as a psychological speciality facilitates personal and interpersonal functioning across the life span with a focus on emotional social vocational educational health related developmental and organisational concerns. Through the integration of theory research and practice and with a sensitivity to multicultural issues this speciality encompasses a broad range of practices that help people improve their well-being, alleviate distress and maladjustment, resolve crises and increase their ability to live more highly functioning lives. Though closely related to clinical psychology, counseling psychology differs from that field in several subtle ways. First, counseling psychologists typically focus on less severe psychopathology, e.g. depression and anxiety, while clinical psychologists deal with more seriously disturbed individuals, e.g. those with schizophrenia or personality disorders. Second, counseling psychologists are more likely than clinical psychologists to assume a client-centred or humanistic theoretical approach. Finally, counseling psychology is unique in its attention both to normal developmental issues as well as the problems associated with physical, emotional and mental disorders. Despite these differences, counseling and clinical psychology are becoming increasingly indistinguishable, leading some to suggest that these fields be combined. Populations served by counseling psychologists include persons of all ages and cultural backgrounds. Examples of those populations would include late adolescents or adults with career educational concerns and children or adults facing severe personal difficulties. Counseling psychologists also consult with organisations seeking to enhance their effectiveness or the well-being of their members. This book focuses on new research in the field from around the world.
