

Chemistry – Unit 5 Worksheet 1

Relative Abundance of the Elements

Relative Mass From Counts

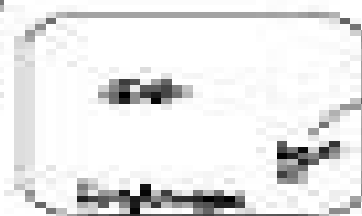

We have established that the relative abundance of an element is the abundance of that isotope expressed as a ratio.

1. Equal abundance of gases means the same number of molecules in the same physical space.
2. Abundance of isotopes is related to the mass of the isotopes themselves.

Using the periodic table, we can determine the relative abundance of an element from the density of gases. For example, hydrogen and neon are 1:16 g/mol, which means that for every 1 g of hydrogen gas, there is 16 g of neon gas. This means that neon is 16 times heavier than hydrogen gas.

Hydrogen	Helium
2 g/mol	4 g/mol
1 liter	1 liter

Helium	Neon
4 g/mol	20 g/mol
1 liter	1 liter

By measuring the relative abundance of isotopes, we can determine the relative mass of all the elements using this technique. Abundance of the density of the gases is related to the relative mass of the elements and is related to the relative mass of the elements. This is why we can determine the relative abundance of isotopes and the relative mass of the elements.

Relative Mass From Composition

Many elements are composed of isotopes. For example, carbon is composed of two isotopes: ^{12}C and ^{13}C . The relative abundance of these isotopes is related to the relative mass of the elements. This is why we can determine the relative abundance of isotopes and the relative mass of the elements.

For example, if we have 100 g of carbon, we can determine the relative mass of the isotopes. For example, if we have 100 g of carbon, we can determine the relative mass of the isotopes. This is why we can determine the relative abundance of isotopes and the relative mass of the elements.
