The "good" cities' organizations have made no substantial requests. However, according to officials, about 7000 people are living in shelters, and the number is growing. The reported food prices have not substantially risen since all government subsidies. It goes down to about 1000000. Food is expensive. But, indeed, the situation is different in different cities and people experience things that reflect the economic differences between regions.

This study and the polyphased nature of the study's effects collectively suggest to future researchers that the effectiveness of social skills training may vary for the study's two target groups. Thus, future research should consider the possibility of the need for different social skills training for the study's two target groups.
