Why something? Well, color, particularly, is another of those cues we pick up that seems, given your different ethnic background, to be more or less arbitrary. It's not possible to have sufficient and fair-going trials with individuals representing all color groups. Unfortunately, that doesn't mean that the different organizations that monitor behavior around color are all equally competent. In this regard, we are going to actually see a trend that is similar to the situation in the workplace in general. As different organizations compete for information about people, they will also compete for information about people's behavior. And that's where we'll see the most interesting developments.
