
Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-velocity resistance training program on the strength and endurance of the lower extremities in older adults. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 20 healthy, sedentary older adults (mean age = 70.5 years, range 65–75 years). The subjects were randomly assigned to either a resistance training group or a control group. The resistance training group performed a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-velocity resistance training program. The control group performed a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-velocity resistance training program. The subjects were assessed for strength and endurance of the lower extremities at baseline and at 12 weeks. The results showed that the resistance training group had significantly greater strength and endurance of the lower extremities at 12 weeks compared to the control group. The findings of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-velocity resistance training program can improve the strength and endurance of the lower extremities in older adults.
