

HOME Landscaping Guide

Foundation plantings are the combination of plants around:

the front door,

corners,

and transition area
that joins them.

Use plants to blend the structure of the house with the general surroundings so that the house looks natural on its site.

A properly designed front landscape can greatly enhance the appearance and market value of your property.

Since houses come in all shapes and sizes, there is no "cookbook" recipe for landscaping. However, here are some general tips to follow:

A guideline for plant heights along the front of the house is to draw a "V" from each corner eave down to the door. The tallest plants at the end should be no taller than $\frac{2}{3}$ the height of the corners of the house.

Do not think you have to put plants all the way across the foundation. The main idea is to soften the home's features, not camouflage. In some situations a bed of ground-cover or mulch may be all that is necessary to tie plantings together.

Don't locate plants within 1.5 feet of the foundation where the soil is often too dry for good plant growth. Plants should not grow against the house in order to maintain good air circulation.

The entrance planting should help direct attention to the front door. Use plants with year-round interest, as they are seen closely many times.

Think of the front door as the center interest and focal point.

Avoid long rows of the same plant to fill areas. Incorporate variety.
