

HOW RED WINE IS MADE

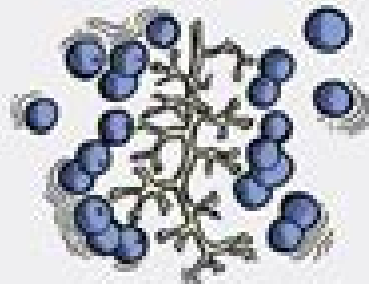

WINE FOLLY

The only guide to the wine-making process that is both fun and informative

Harvest grapes

The vintage (harvest) period is the best time to pick the grapes. Harvesting is done by hand or machine. Grapes are picked and then pressed to extract the juice from the whole grape.

Prepare grapes

Grapes are washed and then crushed. Some wineries ferment whole clusters to add flavor. The result is a thick, pulpy juice. Some wineries use a crusher to break the grapes into smaller pieces.

Clarification

Clarification or "fining" is the process of removing any remaining solids from the juice. This is done by adding a fining agent, which causes the solids to settle to the bottom of the tank.

Press

After the fermentation process, the juice is pressed to extract the remaining juice. The juice is then filtered and bottled.

Fermentation

The juice is then fermented in a wooden barrel. The fermentation process is controlled by temperature and time. The result is a wine with a rich, complex flavor.

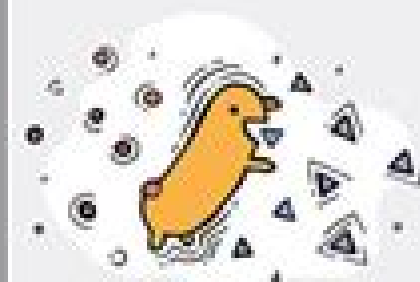

Add yeast

Yeast is added to the juice to start the fermentation process. The yeast converts the sugar in the juice into alcohol. The fermentation process is controlled by temperature and time.

Bottling

Bottling is the final step in the wine-making process. The wine is bottled and sealed with a cork. The bottles are then stored in a cellar for aging.

Malolactic

Malolactic fermentation is a process in which the malic acid in the juice is converted into lactic acid. This process is controlled by temperature and time. The result is a wine with a smoother, more balanced flavor.

Aging

The wine is aged in a wooden barrel for a period of time. The aging process is controlled by temperature and time. The result is a wine with a rich, complex flavor.

Blending

The wine is blended with other wines to create a final product. The blending process is controlled by temperature and time. The result is a wine with a unique flavor.

Bottle aging

Bottle aging is the final step in the wine-making process. The wine is bottled and sealed with a cork. The bottles are then stored in a cellar for aging.
