

Free Particle Model Worksheet 2: In 1D motion

1. Explain what is meant by free and give an example.

A free particle is a particle which moves independently of any forces, i.e. no forces act on it. In reality, this is never the case. A more realistic way of looking at it is to say that the forces acting on the particle are negligible compared to the forces acting on the particle. In this case, the particle is said to be free. The forces acting on the particle are negligible compared to the forces acting on the particle.

2. Give an example of a free particle (what are the forces acting on it)? Give the expression of the force acting on it by the Earth's gravity (what is the expression of the force acting on it)?

For example, a free particle is a particle which moves independently of any forces, i.e. no forces act on it. In reality, this is never the case. A more realistic way of looking at it is to say that the forces acting on the particle are negligible compared to the forces acting on the particle. In this case, the particle is said to be free. The forces acting on the particle are negligible compared to the forces acting on the particle.

3. Is the acceleration of a free particle constant? If yes, what is the expression of the force acting on it?

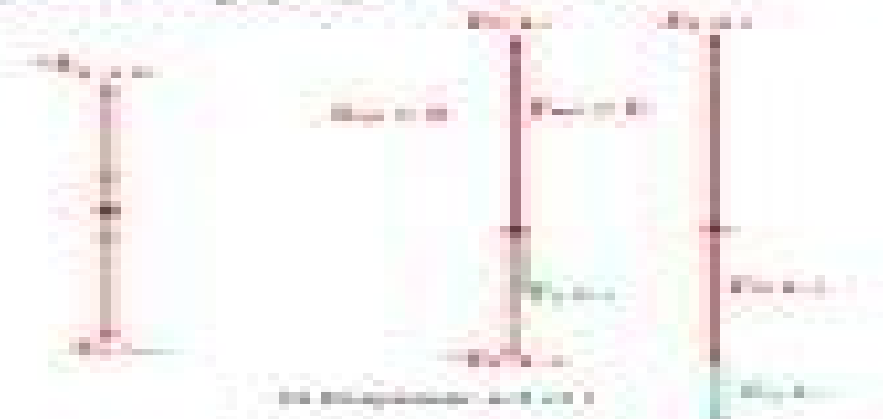

The acceleration of a free particle is constant. The force acting on it is the force of gravity. The expression of the force acting on it is $F = mg$.

4. Describe the free particle model. Give the expression of the force acting on it.

The free particle model is a model in which the particle is free of any forces. The expression of the force acting on it is $F = mg$.
