Chapter 2

Leadership and Management: A Framework for Action

Elizabeth Bradley, Jane Banastak-Hoff, Ingrid Nienbhard

Lecture Outline

A. Chapter Purpose

- The purpose of this chapter is to define and distinguish the concepts of leadership and management, identify theoretical traditions through which leadership has been analyzed, consider the role of organizational culture, explain the larger set of roles leaders may play in health care organizations, and summarize recent research on healthcare and leadership.

B. Leadership versus Management

- Leadership is the process in which one engages others to set and achieve a common goal while management is the process of accomplishing predetermined objectives through the effective use of human, financial, and technical resources.
1. Leadership is concerned with setting large goals.
  2. Management is concerned with the execution of actions to achieve these goals.
  3. One person may be called upon to perform both leadership and management.

C. Leadership in Organizations

- There are three levels of management and associated responsibility.
1. Front line managers provide supervision directly to care providers. Here, individuals gain exposure to managing teams, directly integrating clinical professionals and improving quality and reducing inefficiencies in clinical care.
  2. Middle managers have responsibility for entire units within the healthcare organization and are the majority of managers. They face the double bind of managing up and reporting to their own manager while managing down and supervising a group of subordinates.
  3. Top managers are those responsible for managing the entire organization and have responsibility for all units of the organization. They determine the strategic direction and consist of two groups:
    - a. Those generally denominated by the term "Chief ..." with acronyms such as CEO, CFO, COO, CNO, CMO and, in the past, terms such as president, vice-president, treasurer, constitute the C-suite managers.
