Record sales under a perpetual inventory system.

In accordance with the revenue recognition principle, companies record sales revenue when the performance obligation is satisfied. Typically, the performance obligation is satisfied when the goods transfer from the seller to the buyer. At this point, the sales transaction is complete and the sales price is established.

Sales may be made on credit or for cash. A business document should support every sales transaction, to provide written evidence of the sale. Cash register receipts provide evidence of cash sales. A sales invoice, like the one shown in Illustration 8-4 (page 216), provides support for a credit sale. The original copy of the invoice goes to the customer, and the seller keeps a copy for use in recording the sale. The invoice shows the date of sale, customer name, total sales price, and other relevant information.

The sales invoice has entries for each sale. The first entry records the sale. The seller increases (debits) Cash or Accounts Receivable if a credit sale and also increases (credits) Sales Revenue. The second entry records the cost of the merchandise sold. The seller increases (debits) Cost of Goods Sold and also decreases (credits) Inventory for the cost of those goods. Here, each of the business events will show a total sales amount of $1,000 that should be as follows:

In Illustration 8-4, each sales transaction, PW Audio Supply records as this T sale of $1,000 to Cash Sales (see Illustration 8-4) or Sales Revenue (the other illustration uses PW Audio Supply $1,000).

Account	Debit	Credit
Cash	1,000
Sales		1,000

Cash Sales to Sales

Account	Debit	Credit
Cost of Goods Sold	800
Inventory		800

Cost of Goods Sold
to Inventory

May 4	Accounts Receivable	1,000
	Sales		1,000
	(To record credit sale to Cash Sales per invoice #100)

4	Cost of Goods Sold	1,000
	Inventory		1,000
	(To record cost of merchandise sold to Sales #100 to Cash Sales)

For internal decision-making purposes, merchandising companies may use more than one sales account. For example, PW Audio Supply may decide to keep separate sales accounts for its sales of TVs, stereo players, and headphones. They might use separate accounts for carrying your children's clothing, and all equipment—or a single sales account for carrying your children's clothing, and all equipment—or a single sales account for carrying your children's clothing, and all equipment—or a single sales account for carrying your children's clothing, and all equipment. By using separate sales accounts for major product lines, rather than a single combined sales account, company management can more clearly monitor sales trends and respond more strategically to changes in sales behavior. For example, if TV sales are increasing while stereo player sales are decreasing, PW Audio Supply might concentrate more on advertising and pricing policies for their items to ensure they are optimal.

OTHER NOTES

Many companies are using a computer to record sales. For example, the computer could track sales and provide real-time information on sales trends.

On the income statement presented in Illustration 8-5, a merchandising company normally would provide only a single sales figure—the sum of all of its individual sales accounts. This is true for two reasons. First, providing detail on all of its individual sales accounts would add considerable length to the income statement. Second, companies do not want their competitors to know the details of their operating results. However, income is reported in the income statement from three to five lines. The reason: The additional categories outlined financial statement users to better understand the growth of the company's revenues and internal transactions.
