

The Goals and Activities of Financial Management

1

Author's Overview

The major thrust of this chapter is to establish the objectives of financial management and the importance of the financial manager to the organization. The introduction focuses on the financial decisions that a company like IBM makes and allows the instructor to bring the text world into the classroom immediately. Although the financial risks might not be at the forefront of the student's mind, it provides a good example of the risk that management and investors face. The Dodd-Frank Act can be used to discuss legislative reaction to the behavior of financial institutions and to talk about the unintended consequences that often come out of such regulations. The various forms of organizations should be developed, and the Finance in Action box, "The Endangered Public Company" points out the problems of public companies and discusses their current situation (NBER) found in many foreign countries. This provides a good place to start the discussion of the various forms of organization. The instructor should highlight the importance of corporate wealth maximization as a goal and briefly relate it to valuation concepts associated with risk and return. In addition, the role and functions of the financial markets in allocating capital should be emphasized as well as the purposes of institutional investors as financial managers. The student should also be directed to the shortfalls of profit-maximization as the ultimate goal of the firm. Authors' discussion of social responsibility and its relationship to the financial objectives of the firm can engage students in a discussion of how wealth maximization and social responsibility can co-exist. The Finance in Action box on the IBM Company is a good example of this co-existence. We end the chapter with a short discussion of the impact of internationalization and information technology on financial markets.

Chapter Concepts

- LO 1-1 List some of the concepts that the field of finance covers.
- LO 1-2 Recognize that a firm can have many different forms of organization.
- LO 1-3 Describe how the relationship of risk to return is a central focus of finance.
- LO 1-4 Explain the primary goal of financial managers.
- LO 1-5 Recall that financial managers attempt to achieve wealth maximization through daily activities such as credit and inventory management and through longer term decisions related to raising funds.
