Sample application of A Measure of Integrity

STEPS TO GUIDE THE APPLICATION OF A MEASURE OF INTEGRITY IN YOUR ORGANIZATION

1. Choose a core value of your organization to focus on prior to applying the Measure of Integrity. For the purposes of our sample exercise, we will focus on the organizational value of respect for the rights of indigenous peoples.
2. How do we talk about this value, and how do we walk the talk? Once you have decided on the core value you want to focus on, how about your organization's history for something to that value. The value you talk about the value and your values. What kind of the value most clearly identifies your organization's approach to the value?
3. How do we talk about this value, and how do we walk the talk? Once you have decided on the core value you want to focus on, how about your organization's history for something to that value. The value you talk about the value and your values. What kind of the value most clearly identifies your organization's approach to the value?
4. Are there gaps? If so, how can you close those gaps? For example, in the community and culture centers of the past for your organization, you need to plan to closely identify any gaps. In many cases, there is a wide range of involvement and action in support of indigenous rights, creating confusion in the current community and their advancement gap across communities and actions.
5. Setting new priorities. Finally, your organization is ready to making a plan to use the Measure of Integrity as a living right. You can think back to the history of the value and your commitment to respect of A Measure of Integrity for your organization that what you the surrounding community and people?
