

Step 1: Paint in sky. Notice Hokusai used the compliment (opposite) of blue which is orange in nature? It makes for great contrast. Here I used tints (whites) and shades (blacks) of orange to complete my background

Step 2: There will be 3 different layers of waves. Begin with mapping out your shapes of waves for this first layer. Use a medium blue and then fully dry your painting with a hairdryer. Hokusai created a famous icon of Japan in his background, Mt. Fuji. I painted in a famous icon from where I live, the Narragansett Towers.

Step 3: At this point you will mix 3 blue tones; a light, medium and dark blue. Stripe your waves to represent the lights and darks in water. Dry fully with hair dryer.

Now you will add an off-white to the tops of the waves. Hokusai had fun with this, creating curls and twists out of his foam. This gave his waves a very personal style. What can you come up with?

Step 4: With medium blue, map out the second/middle layer of waves. Add three tones of blue and stripe them. Dry it. Same as before you can now add an off-white color to the tops of the waves to create foam. Use hair dryer to fully dry this layer.

Step 5: With medium blue, map out the third and final layer of waves. Using 3 tones of blue, stripe the waves. Dry painting. Add off-white wave caps.

Step 6: Create a light grey-blue to add as shadows to the white surf. Add the shadows to the bottoms of the curls as if the sun hit the top of each curl and shadowed the bottom of each curl. Finally, dip toothbrush in off-white paint. Very lightly spritz your painting to represent sea-mist.
