

Introduction

The purpose of this study is to investigate the effects of a new educational program on student performance. The study was conducted over a period of six months, during which time the program was implemented in a classroom setting.

The first objective of the study was to determine whether the program had a significant impact on student achievement. This was measured by comparing the scores of students who participated in the program with those of a control group.

The second objective was to assess the program's impact on student engagement. This was measured by observing the students' behavior in the classroom and by conducting interviews with the students.

The third objective was to evaluate the program's impact on student self-efficacy. This was measured by using a self-efficacy scale that was administered to the students at the beginning and end of the study.

The fourth objective was to determine the program's impact on student motivation. This was measured by using a motivation scale that was administered to the students at the beginning and end of the study.

The fifth objective was to assess the program's impact on student attendance. This was measured by tracking the students' attendance records throughout the study.

The sixth objective was to evaluate the program's impact on student behavior. This was measured by observing the students' behavior in the classroom and by conducting interviews with the students.

The seventh objective was to determine the program's impact on student social skills. This was measured by using a social skills scale that was administered to the students at the beginning and end of the study.

The eighth objective was to assess the program's impact on student emotional well-being. This was measured by using an emotional well-being scale that was administered to the students at the beginning and end of the study.

The ninth objective was to determine the program's impact on student academic achievement. This was measured by comparing the scores of students who participated in the program with those of a control group.
