There are two ways to use the `getenv` function. First, you can pass the name of the environment variable as a string to the function. If the variable exists, the function returns a pointer to the value of the variable. If the variable does not exist, the function returns a null pointer. Second, you can pass a pointer to a character array to the function. The function will store the value of the environment variable in the array. If the variable does not exist, the function returns a null pointer.
