Enzymes and Cellular Regulation

(Illustrate the factors that regulate the activity of the enzyme catalase (catalase))

Wright

Enzymes are protein-based biological molecules that play a crucial role in most life. They help various chemical reactions occur within cells, and are responsible for various processes in the body's metabolism. Enzymes function as catalysts and are highly specific to their substrates, which means they can speed up reactions without being consumed in the process. They are also highly sensitive to environmental factors such as temperature, pH, and substrate concentration. The activity of an enzyme is regulated by various factors, including the presence of inhibitors and activators, which can either increase or decrease the rate of the reaction.
