Abstract: This study examined the effects of a 12-week, 100-hour, noncredit course on the self-efficacy and self-regulation of 100 first-year students. The course was designed to help students develop the skills and knowledge necessary to succeed in college. The results of the study showed that students who completed the course had significantly higher self-efficacy and self-regulation scores than those who did not. The findings suggest that the course was effective in helping students develop the skills and knowledge necessary to succeed in college.
