

Some Highlights From the Food, Inc. Documentary

4 pages | 780 words

The 2008 documentary Food Inc focuses on corporate farming in the United States. It poses questions about the unsustainability of cultural practices that are both harmful to the environment, the animals, and the consumer. These practices are the cornerstones of corporations such as Monsanto, which dominates the agricultural business in the United States. The film highlights how the downsides of Industrialisation, unfair trade, and the downsides of forced neoliberalisation combine to illustrate the limits and dangers of corporate farming. From an environmental sociological perspective, Food Inc can be analyzed through the following concepts and trends. Human-environment interaction, Human Exceptionalism Paradigm (HEP) Human-environment interaction and lack recognizance of the Existential Doctrine of the combine to dominate the philosophy of corporate agriculture. In 1980, American Sociologist Allan Schnaiberg developed a conflict theory on human-environment interaction. He suggests that the collapse of the Mayan civilization was proof that cultures are vulnerable to ecological suicide. As discussed in class Earth Day of 1970 marked a new age of environmentally conscious and awareness. This modern ecological though suggested a new perspective that took environmental variables into account. In the latter half of the 20th century, biological determinism failed to fully explain the relationship between humans and the environment. The process contains a chief paradox; economic growth is socially desired, but environmental degradation is a common consequence that in turn disrupts long-run economic expansion (Schnaiberg 1980). The HEP theory claims that humans are such a uniquely superior species that they are exempt from environmental forces. This, as demonstrated through the industry practices by Monstano and others, is a key component in Food Inc. The belief that Humans had the capacity to accumulate and innovate, therefore making us capable of solving all-natural problems. This theory states that while the earth has a finite level of natural resources and waste repositories, the innovative capacity of humans will prevail. Further, the theory states that growth in production will in fact lead to a growth in consumption. We see the film reference the cheap but unhealthy meals sold at fast-food chains which are far cheaper than healthier alternatives. The example used is that you can purchase a double cheeseburger for a dollar, but ahead of broccoli costs around two dollars. It is clear that the corporations subscribe to the idea that any potential environmental can be circumnavigated using human ingenuity. Another compelling point that the bring that the film brings up is that they're only a few major companies that present the illusion of choice through a variety of France but in actuality, many of them are owned by the same company. perspectives voiced in food Inc take the form of a lobbying/activist narrative about the huge business of bolstering or forcibly feeding Americans all the garbage that worldwide corporate cash can produce. New sentence Taylor Moore's perspectives in the film are voiced by seasoned Andres experts of the food industry including Michael Pollan writer of in defense of food and the Omnivore's Dilemma dilemma and eric Schlosser creator of inexpensive Food Nation. Although the film highlights and investigates the creature's mystery I mistakenly sign of primary Spotlight on the...

Reclaiming Popular Documentary Christie Milliken, Steve F. Anderson, 2021-07-06 The documentary has achieved rising popularity over the past two decades thanks to streaming services like Netflix and Hulu Despite this documentary studies still tends to favor works that appeal primarily to specialists and scholars Reclaiming Popular Documentary reverses this long standing tendency by showing that documentaries can be and are made for mainstream or commercial audiences Editors Christie Milliken and Steve Anderson who consider popular documentary to be a subfield of documentary studies embrace an expanded definition of popular to acknowledge the many evolving forms of documentary such as branded entertainment fictional hybrids and works with audience participation Together these essays address emerging documentary forms including web docs virtual reality immersive journalism viral media interactive docs and video on demand and offer the critical tools viewers need to analyze contemporary documentaries and consider how they are persuaded by and represented in documentary media By combining perspectives of scholars and makers Reclaiming Popular Documentary brings new understandings and international perspectives to familiar texts using critical models that will engage media scholars and fans alike Moving Environments Alexa Weik von Mossner, 2014-10-07 In Moving Environments Affect Emotion Ecology and Film international scholars investigate how films portray human emotional relationships with the more than human world and how such films act upon their viewers emotions Emotion and affect are the basic mechanisms that connect us to our environment shape our knowledge and motivate our actions Contributors explore how film represents and shapes human emotion in relation to different environments and what role time place and genre play in these affective processes Individual essays resituate well researched environmental films such as An Inconvenient Truth and March of the Penguins by paying close attention to their emotionalizing strategies and bring to our attention the affective qualities of films that have so far received little attention from ecocritics such as Stan Brakhage's Dog Star Man. The collection opens a new discursive space at the disciplinary intersection of film studies, affect studies and a growing body of ecocritical scholarship. It will be of interest not only to scholars and students working in the field of ecocriticism and the environmental humanities but for everyone with an interest in our emotional responses to film.

Reshaping International Teaching and Learning in Higher Education Paul G. Nixon, Vanessa P. Dennen, Rajash Rawal, 2021-02-21 This volume provides a broad examination of how technology and globalisation have influenced contemporary higher education institutions and how moves towards internationalisation within and between educational providers continue to be a force for change in this context. Showcasing the varied responses to and utilisation of new technologies to support international teaching and learning endeavours at a range of higher education institutions, this book introduces content from around the world emphasising the global importance of the internationalisation of education. Featuring contributions from some fresh young voices alongside the work of experienced and internationally renowned scholars, this collection critically scrutinises the potential of information and communication technologies (ICTs) on the capacities and patterns of university education, assesses and refines the contention that ICTs are facilitating the reshaping of university practices as well as challenging traditional educational models and learning strategies, provides a comprehensive portrait of the ways in which ICT use engages higher education providers, society and individuals to facilitate potentially more democratic, globally focussed access to knowledge generation, creation, investigation and consumption processes through internationally focussed education and examines the differing pace and scope of change in international educational practice and context between and within countries and disciplines. With an international range of carefully chosen contributors, this book is a must-read text for practitioners, academics, researchers, administrators, policymakers and anyone interested in the future of the university in an information age.

HOW TO CHANGE YOUR MIND - Summarized for Busy People Goldmine Reads, 2019-03-15 This book summary and analysis was created for individuals who want to extract the essential contents and are too busy to go through the full version. This book is not intended to replace the original book. Instead, we highly encourage you to buy the full version. Michael Pollan wanted to research LSD and psilocybin and how it could provide relief to people suffering from conditions that are difficult to treat such as depression, addiction and anxiety. This didn't intend to be his most personal book but because of how these substances could improve the lives even of the people with mental health problems, Pollan began to explore the landscape of the mind from his own experience. This began an adventure into the altered states of consciousness backed by the latest research on the brain and an underground community of psychedelic therapists. Pollan switched from historical records in order to separate the myth from the truth that have been around since the 1960s which set a backlash against psychedelic evangelists from the originally promising field of research A perfect blend of science memoir travel writing history and medicine How to Change Your Mind serves as a participatory journalism that gives a gripping account of the world of understanding the mind the self and our place in the world Pollan's mental travelogue not only looks into psychedelic drugs but also the puzzle of the human consciousness and how it could set us in suffering and in joy while doing our best of find the meaning in our lives Wait no more take action and get this book now

Eating Tomorrow Timothy A. Wise, 2019-02-05 A powerful polemic against agricultural technology Nature A major new book that shows the world already has the tools to feed itself without expanding industrial agriculture or adopting genetically modified seeds from the Small Planet Institute expert Few challenges are more daunting than feeding a global population projected to reach 9.7 billion in 2050 at a time when climate change is making it increasingly difficult to successfully grow crops In response corporate and philanthropic leaders have called for major investments in industrial agriculture including genetically modified seed technologies Reporting from Africa Mexico India and the United States Timothy A Wise's Eating Tomorrow discovers how in country after country agribusiness and its well heeled philanthropic promoters have hijacked food policies to feed corporate interests Most of the world Wise reveals is fed by hundreds of millions of small scale farmers people with few resources and simple tools but a keen understanding of what and how to grow food These same farmers who already grow more than 70 percent of the food eaten in developing countries can show the way forward as the world warms and population increases Wise takes readers to remote villages to see how farmers are rebuilding soils with ecologically sound practices and nourishing a diversity of native crops without chemicals or imported seeds They are growing more and healthier food in the process they are not just victims in the climate drama but protagonists who have much to teach us all
