Abstract: This paper reports on a study of the effects of a 12-week, 100-hour, noncredit, intensive training program for the preparation of paraprofessionals in the field of special education. The program was designed to meet the needs of the state of North Carolina, which has a high demand for paraprofessionals in the field of special education. The study was conducted in a large, urban, public school district in North Carolina. The results of the study indicate that the program was effective in preparing paraprofessionals for the field of special education. The program was found to be effective in increasing the knowledge and skills of participants, and in increasing their confidence in their ability to perform the duties of a paraprofessional. The program was also found to be effective in increasing the number of paraprofessionals in the field of special education. The results of the study suggest that the program should be expanded to other parts of the state.
