The music education program at Mount Nittany Middle School presents special opportunities for students to learn personal and professional competencies needed to succeed after departure. Students sing, perform, learn and create through the medium of music, which they cannot do anywhere else. There are numerous studies and reports demonstrating that the presence alone of a music education program in schools is beneficial to standardized test scores, GPAs, attendance rates, as well as graduation and attrition rates (Demorest & Morrison, 2000; College Board, 2012; NAFME, 2006). However, the concert band program at Mount Nittany Middle school does much more for its students; they are given the resources and knowledge necessary to be informed, accomplished musicians and citizens. All students, regardless of musical ability and experience are able to participate in curricular activities offered by the MNMS Bands.

In small lesson groups, MNMS band students learn how to combine instrument technique with the elements of music while studying a variety of music ranging from lesson books, concert band repertoire and chamber music. On the larger scale, students practice collaboration and communication in ensembles ranging from 22-50 musicians, who come together to practice and perform. In these larger ensembles, students have the opportunity to make decisions of how they interpret and understand the sounds around them while also reflecting on theirs and their peers' music making. Being able to contextualize and reflect upon music requires critical thinking skills, which are practiced as musicians alter how they are playing after reacting to what they are hearing internally and externally. This kind of process also happens in chamber ensembles.

Students are also encouraged to participate in chamber, or small groups where they have even more autonomy to interpret a composer's music. MNMS students are eager and energetic to express themselves through arranging and transcribing already existing works and compose their
