Abstract | The authors examined the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program on the health-related quality of life of older adults with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD). The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The study population consisted of 40 older adults with COPD, who were randomly assigned to either a supervised exercise program or a control group. The supervised exercise program consisted of 12 weeks of low-intensity, supervised exercise. The control group received no intervention. The primary outcome was the health-related quality of life, measured using the St. George's Respiratory Questionnaire (SGRQ). The secondary outcomes were the 6-minute walk test (6MWT) and the Borg Scale of Perceived Exertion (Borg Scale). The results showed that the supervised exercise program significantly improved the health-related quality of life, 6MWT, and Borg Scale scores compared to the control group. The authors concluded that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program can improve the health-related quality of life of older adults with COPD.
