

23.1.1. Intermittent (10% of the population) is characterized by a low frequency of attacks, which may be associated with a low level of anxiety. The attacks are usually triggered by a specific stimulus, such as a change in posture, a change in the environment, or a change in the level of activity. The attacks are usually short and self-limiting, and the patient is usually able to return to a state of normalcy after the attack has subsided.
