

The Digestive System

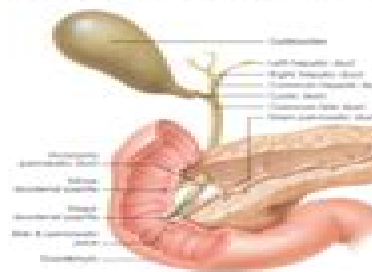

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food enters through the mouth, is broken down in the stomach, and then moves through the small intestine, where nutrients are absorbed. The digestive system also includes accessory organs that help in the process, such as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder.

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, digested material enters the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, where it is mixed with bile secreted by the liver. The liver is a large organ on the right side of the abdomen. It produces bile, which is stored in the gallbladder. Bile then moves through the pancreas, which produces pancreatic juice, and enters the duodenum.

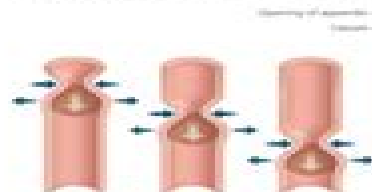

Layers of large intestine

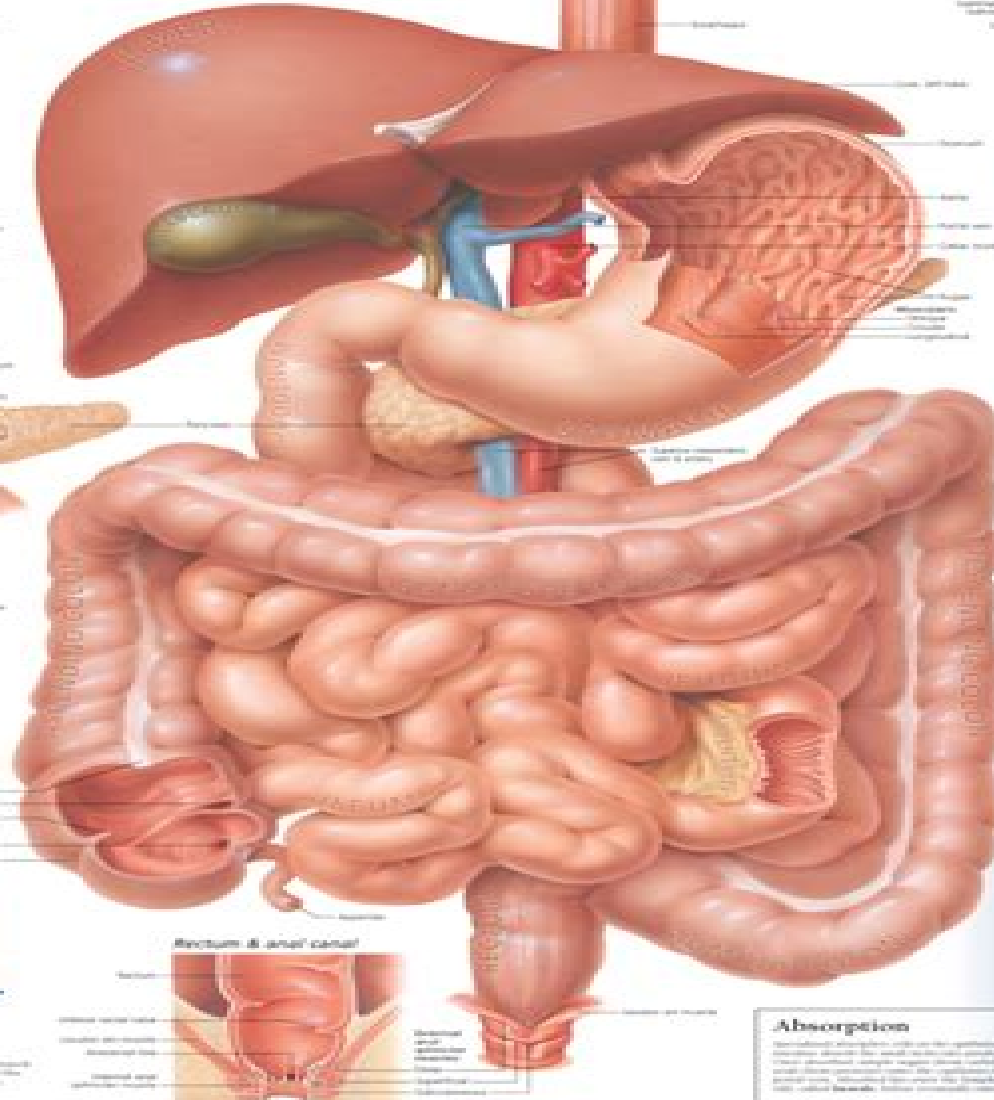

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the appendix, the ascending colon, the transverse colon, the descending colon, the sigmoid colon, and the rectum. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the remaining indigestible food matter, and for forming and storing feces.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful muscular contractions called peristalsis. These contractions move the material forward and the wave which, called the peristaltic wave, is called the peristaltic wave.

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing the food breaks it into smaller pieces, making it easier to swallow. Saliva, secreted by the salivary glands, moistens the food and helps in the digestion of carbohydrates. Saliva also contains the enzyme amylase, which begins the digestion of starches. Saliva also contains the enzyme lipase, which begins the digestion of fats. Saliva also contains the enzyme protease, which begins the digestion of proteins.

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for storing and mixing food with gastric juices. It is located in the upper left part of the abdomen. The stomach has a thick, muscular wall that contracts to mix food with gastric juices. The stomach also has a lining called the mucosa, which secretes mucus to protect the stomach wall from the acidic gastric juices.

Small intestine

The small intestine consists of three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. It is responsible for the majority of the digestion and absorption of nutrients. The small intestine is a long, coiled tube that is about 6 meters long. It has a highly folded inner lining called the microvilli, which increases the surface area for absorption.

Absorption

The nutrients are absorbed into the blood and lymphatic system. The nutrients are absorbed through the intestinal lining, which is made of small, finger-like projections called microvilli. The nutrients are then transported to the liver and other parts of the body.
