Muscle Action

Muscles of the body

The muscular system consists of both the skeletal system to allow a wide variety of motions, including bending, sitting and standing, flexing, extending, or shrugging, pulling structures together. Muscles can attach to bones through a tendon, or else to other muscles.

Muscle action—smiling

The end of a facial muscle, the zygomatic major, attaches to the corner of the mouth. When the muscle contracts, the corner of the mouth turns diagonally towards the cheek and the side. Another aspect of smiling is the contraction of the orbicular oris muscle, causing the skin under the eye to wrinkle.

Muscle types

There are three types of muscle: cardiac, smooth and skeletal.

Cardiac muscle provides the power that enables us to pump under continuous control.

Smooth muscle provides the force needed to pump various fluids back to the heart.

Skeletal muscle provides the overall force to move the blood through the muscular system.

Smooth muscle moves solids and fluids through the digestive system.

Skeletal muscle action

A skeletal muscle works by contracting, resulting in pulling force through a tendon connected to bone. In flexion, the biceps brachii muscle contracts and the longer brachii muscle relaxes, moving the lower arm upward. The muscle that produces the action is called the agonist, and the opposing muscle is called the antagonist.

This movement is reversed by the action of an opposing muscle. When the lower arm is extended, the longer brachii muscle becomes the agonist, and the biceps brachii muscle acts as the antagonist.

Class 1 lever

Levers are devices that move an object using a fixed point, or fulcrum. Force is applied against a load in a straight line. A lever is composed of muscle and bone as a point can change the direction, speed and distance of movement. Class 1 levers change the direction of the force, and not distance. While Class 2 levers, a smaller force can move a larger load, but both speed and distance traveled are reduced. Class 3 levers move the load in the same direction as the force. The gain in distance traveled and speed, but least force is required.

Contracting

Sliding filament theory

The sliding filament theory describes the mechanism of muscle contraction. In a sarcomere the proteins actin is bound to thin filaments, and the myosin proteins to thick filaments. The myosin molecules have a long head and an attached tail. During a contraction the myosin heads attach to the thin filaments, then tilt, pulling the thin filaments towards the myosin center. The myosin heads release, then attach to the next protein on the actin filament.

Neuromuscular synapse

Muscles contract when a signal from the nervous system travels through a motor neuron (a type of nerve cell) to a muscle cell. The motor neuron carries the message to an area terminal, or synaptic bulb, at the regular end of the nerve. The synaptic bulb meets with the terminal membrane, creating "synapses" where the released neurotransmitter (these molecules carry the message) crosses the gap and binds to receptors on the muscle cell membrane, transferring the impulse to the muscle cell.

The effects of neurotransmitters are short-lived, because the stuff has to be cleared first before action. The neurotransmitter molecules are either broken down by enzymes (acetylcholinesterase and monoamine oxidase) or reabsorbed (serotonin).

Muscle fiber

Muscle fibers are elongated cells with the ability to contract, or shorten along their length. Each skeletal muscle fiber has many nuclei and contains hundreds to thousands of myofibrils. Myofibrils are structures responsible for muscle contraction. A myofibril is made up of groups of myofibrils, previously composed of myofibrils called actin and myosin. The myosin moves the myofibrils towards the center.

Skeletal muscle anatomy

Skeletal muscles are made up of muscle fibers (myofibrils) called myofibrils, surrounded by the collagen and elastic fibers of the perimysium. Each myofibril is composed of muscle fiber cells, separated and supported by connective tissue fibers called the endomysium. The entire muscle is surrounded by a dense, irregular connective tissue layer called the epimysium. The epimysium, perimysium and endomysium come together to form a tendon, which attaches muscles to bones.
