Endocrine System and Endocrine Organs

Background

The endocrine system has specialized organs called glands, hormones and receptors. Together, they coordinate and control body functions through chemical messengers and feedback mechanisms in response to constantly changing internal and external conditions.

Basically, all endocrine glands release hormones, which travel into the system controlling and coordinating the processes within the body.

1. The anterior pituitary gland, which is the distal part of a gland called the hypothalamus, releases growth hormone, which is the source for protein synthesis in muscle.
2. The posterior pituitary gland, which is a neuroendocrine gland, releases oxytocin and vasopressin, which are hormones that control water balance in the body.

The endocrine system works in tandem with the nervous system to control all body functions and processes.

Four major glands release hormones that control the system: the hypothalamus, the pituitary gland, the thyroid gland, and the adrenal gland.
