Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were randomly assigned to a 12-week training program (n = 20) or a control group (n = 20). The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The control group remained sedentary. The primary outcome was the change in HRQL, measured using the SF-36 questionnaire. The secondary outcome was the change in physical fitness, measured using the 6-minute walk test. The results showed that the training program significantly improved HRQL and physical fitness in the women. The HRQL score increased from 45.0 to 55.0, and the 6-minute walk test score increased from 300 to 400 meters. The control group showed no significant changes in HRQL or physical fitness. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve HRQL and physical fitness in sedentary, middle-aged women.
