It is worth noting that the letter writers acknowledged their agreement to take on a very specific challenge and the implications of that choice: a need to address a seemingly "aggravated" and "frustrating" situation, particularly in their judgment of community violence and harm; a recognition that they are individuals, not a collective, and that their perspective is not the only one; and a potential acknowledgment of their role in perpetuating violence. It is worth recognizing that a number of very concerned individuals are collectively taking action. Community participation in violence prevention practices for addressing the violence in public space is not a new endeavor in different forms.
