Abstract | The authors examined the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of 100 sedentary, middle-aged women. The program was designed to be safe and enjoyable, and to be easily integrated into the women's daily lives. The program resulted in significant improvements in physical fitness, including increases in aerobic capacity, muscle strength, and flexibility. Psychological health also improved, with reductions in anxiety and depression, and increases in self-esteem and quality of life. The authors conclude that a supervised walking program can be an effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
