This was the first time during the 1980s that genetic engineering was used to produce a vaccine against a human disease. The gene was inserted into a harmless virus, known as the vaccinia virus, which is used to produce smallpox vaccines. The virus was then injected into the body of a healthy person, where it would multiply and produce the virus. The virus would then be destroyed by the body's immune system, but the virus would have been able to reproduce and produce the virus. This was the first time that a vaccine was produced using genetic engineering.
