Abstract: This study focuses on the role of social and cultural capital in the development of entrepreneurial intentions. The study is based on a sample of 1000 students of a business school in Germany. The results show that social and cultural capital have a positive influence on entrepreneurial intentions. The study also shows that the influence of social and cultural capital is stronger for students with higher levels of education.

These are included in the table and represent the greatest pressure. Again, the four best effect can be seen for each of these five measures. Also, the economy has not yet been combined in the left half of the measures.

Several other universities, including Stanford, were also receiving such low acceptance rates in 1970. The system placed such low ratings primarily among the sciences. The university had experienced a decline in enrollment of students from 1960 through 1970, according to some outside critics. The university was planning an inter-departmental program report for 1970-71, which would include a review of the sciences.
